Advantages and Drawbacks of a Recent Contrivance In a Gotham Building.

The new Postal Telegraph building at Broadway and Murray street has a pat-ent revolving storm door, which, the ent revolving storm door, which, the inventor says, is the first of its kind introduced into his city. The door has four wings, after the fashion of a turn-stile. There are four doors, in fact, each of them bound with rubber weather straps. The person entering the building pushes against the wing on the right, and the contrivance begins to revolve. By the time he has turned the wing far enough to get inside the building the one behind him has closed.

There is a commendable absence of cold drafts in the work of this revolving door and no turning of knobs, only a little confusion sometimes when two persons try to go in opposite directions at the same time. Two young women, for instance, approached the entrance on Saturday afternoon, one of whom went to the right and the other to the left. Of course they were pushing against each other, and hearing the laughter of some men behind them they pushed the harder, neither wishing to be defeated in what she deemed a test of muscle. So they pushed until some men waiting to get in available to the would be so they pushed until some men waiting to get in explained to the would be amuzous that the door would open only from the right anyhow, and that push-ing on the left would prevent it from opening at all. Therenpon one of the men opened the right door with a simple motion. The girls were perfectly happy over the fact that they had at least kept each other out.

The next to have an argument with the new fangled patent was an excitable, well dressed Irishman, who also pushed to the left. Not being successful he turned partly round to investigate, when a bustling young man shoved the door outward with a rush, and the Irishman's silk hat was knocked off and his dignity otherwise badly rufiled. He was partly carried inside the building by the revolution, so that by the time he got outside again to expostulate his unknown assailant was lost in the "shuf de" of the Broadway crowd, unconscious of having injured anybody's feel

Although the revolving door at times affords as much amusement as a scene in a Drury Lane pantomime, it is said, on the whole, to be a success.—New York Tribune.

HE STUCK TO HIS FRIEND.

An Act of Herolam Which Saved a Wounded Man's Life

A young man named Henry Brault, a resident of Peterboro, Ont., recently performed an act of heroism, actuated by friendship, which is worthy of rec-ord among the heroic deeds of heroic men of any age. Brault and another young man, John Jamieson, were at work in the wild Madawaska region for the St. Anthony the St. Anthony Lumber company.

Jamieson met with a severe accident, which rendered him delirious, and Brault started with him for civilization, where surgical treatment could be had. They had traveled on foot but a few hundred yards when Jamieson's strength gave out and he became help-Brault, determined to save his companion, shouldered the invalid and started on his long, cold tramp of some 40 miles to the nearest railroad. With-out a moment's sleep, and bearing, besides his human burden, a pack of pro-visions, Brault continued his journey four days and nights. Almost as help-less from exhaustion and fatigue as his friend was from illness, he had the satisfaction of reaching the end of his journey and placing Jamicson where he

A Famous Elm Cut Down. The famous old elm which for 114 centuries stood on Somerville avenue, at the corner of Central street, Somer ville, has been cut down. The tree was on the line of march when the British forces retreated from Lexington. It bore a placard which furnished the information that the tree was planted in 177— by Thomas Rand. The exact year is not known. The erection of a building on the land near the tree, which stood in the middle of the sidewalk, directly in front of the building, made it necessary to remove it. There was opposition, and it was only after much de-liberation by the city government that the order for the removal of the tree was Many souvenir hunters have the guest of her daughter, Mrs. John carried off pieces of the tree.-Boston

No Science of Vacht Designing Many improvements have been introduced, but it would be scarcely right to divulge them. The process of evolution of the fin de siecle racing yacht is curi ous. There has been no hitting on a de sign of superlative excellence, details having been ground out slowly, until the successful boat of this year diverges pretty widely from the prototype of seven years ago. There is no science, probably not much genius, about the business.—Engineering.
